The concept reflects the given theme of flight: the form chosen is dynamic and is made up of shapes that contain a whole range of metaphors and images suggesting movement, flight, and motion, takeoff and travel, excitement and aspiration.

The particular shape adopted reflects a more profound level of the same theme: it is a metaphor for man's understanding of and mastering complex forces and mathematical systems of nature, in order to achieve the goal of flight.

Man did not achieve this by brute force, but by the more subtle means of understanding the physics and principles involved in aerodynamics, and using these phenomena constructively.
